

The younger you are, the more appealing my campaign should be to you.

I have two young children about whom I care very much. Their future, and yours, is in large part dependent on the direction our country takes over the next 20 years.

On our current path, the U.S. Government Accountability Office (GAO) – the audit arm of the federal government, sees a debt burden that “ultimately spirals out of control.” GAO’s analysis shows that balancing the budget in 2040 could require cutting of federal spending by 60 percent or doubling federal taxes.

My beliefs: We need to change the direction of our country, so that it can last indefinitely. We should not try to police or dominate the other countries of the world. Our military should be utilized solely for defense. We should attempt to maximize freedom and minimize taxes and regulation. While laws are necessary for a civilized society, some of our approaches to problems need to be revamped.

At 47, I’m able to relate to young people. The qualities I believe to be most significant to be a very effective U.S. senator are a good heart (that aims to serve only the people), a good mind, energy and a will to fight for what is right. I think I have a better combination of these qualities than my opponents, Saxby Chambliss and Jim Martin.

Please take a look at the material on my website. You’ll note I put a lot of time and effort into its creation. I did so while working full-time and being a husband and father. If I could devote all of my work time to being our senator, I think I could be a powerful force in changing the direction of our country for the better.

My campaign is a grass roots effort. If you like what you see, please tell your friends about the website and my campaign. I would appreciate your vote on November 4th.

Thank you.
